William J. Burns & The Detective Profession 1880-1930

Arthur Conan Doyle, a friend and admirer, did not hesitate to call Burns, "America's Sherlock Holmes," a tribute of some meaning. Burns' genius did not quite reach the heights of Holmes but his involvement in major social and criminal events (1880-1930) provides a perspective on a fascinating era and a significant profession.

Burns, the immediate predecessor of J. Edgar Hoover as chief of the Bureau of Investigation, resigned after exposure of his misuse of his office. The sensational scandal, arising from the efforts to protect a corrupt attorney general, clouded his reputation. Before his downfall Burns had enjoyed wide public regard although Samuel Gompers and many union leaders damned his labor-baiting and "Red Scare" tactics.

The Burns International Detective Agency ranked with the Pinkertons in his celebrated criminal cases. Private detectives played a large role in criminal investigations were often employed by local police lacking in manpower and expertise.

For many years before organizing the U.S. Service and the leading actor in investigations. With attorney Francis brought down Abe Ruef, the corrupt San Francisco, and highly placed and land-grabbers of public lands.

Burns produced the evidence in the Los Angeles Times bombing case, succeeded in getting defense attorney Darrow convicted of jury bribery.
