Palestinian Vocalised Piyyut Manuscripts in the Cambridge Genizah Collections Cambridge University Library, Joseph Yahalom, 1997-03-20 In the Semitic languages the vowels are not part of the alphabet and each Semitic language has its special method of marking its particular vowel values In the Hebrew of Late Antiquity a supralinear method of doing this was first introduced after the Arabic conquest of Palestine in the seventh century It was used mainly for liturgical purposes in complicated poetic texts and it was soon displaced by the classical Tiberian system The oldest existing specimens of this supralinear method are on vellum manuscripts from Cairo where the remaining fragments were deposited by Jewish refugees from Crusader Palestine at the end of the eleventh century The fragments from the Cairo depository known as the Cairo Genizah are best represented in the Genizah Collections at Cambridge University Library This volume gives for the first time a full description of the scattered and torn fragments as well as of their notational value From Scrolls to Scrolling Bradford A. Anderson, 2020-06-22 Throughout history the study of sacred texts has focused almost exclusively on the content and meaning of these writings Such a focus obscures the fact that sacred texts are always embodied in particular material forms from ancient scrolls to contemporary electronic devices Using the digital turn as a starting point this volume highlights material dimensions of the sacred texts of Judaism Christianity and Islam The essays in this collection investigate how material aspects have shaped the production and use of these texts within and between the traditions of Judaism Christianity and Islam from antiquity to the present day Contributors also reflect on the implications of transitions between varied material forms and media cultures Taken together the essays suggests that materiality is significant for the academic study of sacred texts as well as for reflection on developments within and between these religious traditions This volume offers insightful analysis on key issues related to the materiality of sacred texts in the traditions of Judaism Christianity and Islam while also highlighting the significance of transitions between various material forms including the current shift to digital culture Medical and Para-medical Manuscripts in the Cambridge Genizah Collections Cambridge University Library, Haskell D.
