French Policy Toward The Arab World Emirates Lecture Series Volume 4:

The Role of Research Centers in Supporting Public Policy The Emirates Center for Strategic Studies and Research, 2017-01-23 With the myriad of challenges facing the modern world and the responsibility to urgently address these issues research centers have an increasingly important role to play In general research centers are specialized institutions that rely on the professional and intellectual expertise of academics in the proposal and setting of policies Hence these institutions are the driving forces that reap such expertise for decision makers in the name of public service As highlighted in this volume modern governments must therefore seek to recruit the top specialists in order to proficiently and accurately assess the options and situations at hand and to formulate policies accordingly This collection of scholarly papers provides a comprehensive overview of some of the issues surrounding the functions of research centers in the current world One of these is how research centers can assist Gulf countries in promoting security in the region With the continued threats of terrorism sectarianism and counterinsurgency the book suggests how these issues can be analyzed in order to better understand their intricate nature and then be countered through balanced efforts that ensure that these endeavors do not aggravate the problems The book also examines the work of research centers in various countries and their invaluable efforts to inform decision makers and grasp the agendas challenges and fundamental aspects of an issue at hand while addressing geopolitical issues and uncovering the most pertinent data amidst an influx of information Finally the book looks at the present and future of research centers in Arab countries and suggests methods of work to rid the negative image of the future in the Arab mind while helping reform the education scientific research and the academic systems France and the Arabian Gulf The Emirates Center for Strategic Studies and Research, 2007-10-08 France has had a long standing and historically significant relationship with the Arab World This relationship is bolstered by the growing volume of bilateral trade between France and the GCC states From the French perspective the Gulf states are major partners and interlocutors hence political dialogue remains intense at all levels Interpersonal relations remain positive being rooted in friendship and confidence Furthermore France and the Gulf states hold convergent positions on almost all regional issues There are growing commercial flows between the GCC states and France which mainly imports oil and gas from these states However a more stable partnership can be established through investment To encourage this a legal framework is imperative to ensure the security of assets and fair returns on investments French security commitments manifest themselves in three ways through support in the fight against terrorism contributions to the defense capacities of the GCC countries and a willingness to participate in a collective system to safeguard Gulf security Since 1995 France has entered into defense agreements with Kuwait Qatar and the UAE and carefully monitors their implementation Every Middle Eastern conflict is approached by France in a different way based on the international situation and its past relations with the countries involved Sometimes France opts to work on a bilateral basis such as in Lebanon and Iraq and sometimes within a multilateral framework

Nevertheless there are common attitudes and enduring principles that guide French engagement in the Middle East French military cooperation in the GCC states is most developed with the UAE followed by Qatar Defense agreements concluded between France and these two Gulf states commit France to the defense of their sovereignty In addition regular high level military exercises and strategic exchanges take place via the joint military committees constituted under these bilateral defense agreements Defense cooperation with the UAE boosted to a great extent by the Offset Program has opened up new avenues for cooperation in other economic and strategic fields Although bilateral defense cooperation reached its apogee in the 1990s and now faces serious competition from the United States such cooperation allowed major French industries in sectors such as water electricity transportation and communications as well as health and education to export their expertise and participate in the training of local companies The GCC has long sought to maintain and expand cooperative ties with the European Union EU which largely inspired its own model for regional integration The political will to enhance EU GCC cooperation appears to be present on both sides and is based on the recognition of common interests Reinforced cooperation between the European Union and the Gulf Cooperation Council is an important element in facilitating constructive exchanges on the stabilization of the Middle East the resolution of crises and a reorientation towards a multi polar world order Ultimately bilateral French Arab cooperation to defend their respective cultures must be preceded by close cultural relations between the parties and a spirit of equality generosity and mutual desire
