

So far, Eva Lott is having a pretty great senior year. She has an amazing best friend, she's dating the best-looking guy in school, and she just made the varsity swim team. So when her dad tells her they're moving to Communist Poland to help with a radical underground movement, she's beyond angry. Soon Eva is forced to leave behind her beloved life in Chicago to live in a place that doesn't even have meat in its stores, let alone pepperoni pizza or records. Worst of all, everywhere she goes, the government is watching.

But something happens while Eva is plotting her escape back to the States. Despite having to endure cold baths and the thuggish militia, Eva discovers that Poland has grown on her. Somehow, in the glow of an unusual friendship with a moody boy named Tomek, Eva begins to wonder if she's found home in the most unlikely of places.

In this moving, coming-of-age love story, Dandi Daley Mackall takes us to a real time and place that has rarely been explored, and introduces us to a character whose story will resonate with readers long after the last page is turned.
