Lennon, 1961 Populations of brook trout in streams of Shenandoah National Park were reduced drastically early in the past decade by a succession of unusually severe droughts and floods The drying of stream beds predation and scouring were principal factors in the loss of fish The park was closed to fishing in 1954 and 1955 to protect survivors The small numbers of survivors quickly repopulated the streams after drought conditions abated The stocking of hatchery reared fingerling trout in selected waters failed to augment the recovery of populations Survival and growth of young wild trout were especially good Their redistribution through miles of previously dry streams was rapid The park was opened again to fishing in 1956 under regulations which restrict the take but afford an increase in sporting opportunity Two streams were placed under fishing for fun only regulations in 1961 The welfare of the trout populations is dependent mostly on the weather cycle Fish may be abundant in wet years but very scarce in dry ones Thus the stream must be managed as marginal for trout Community water access, availability and management in the Tonle Sap region, Cambodia Joffre, O.,de Silva, S.,2015-04-17 During the rollout of CGIAR Research Program on Aquatic Agricultural Systems AAS in Tonle Sap in 2013 water management was highlighted as one of the key development challenges With limited capacity to regulate water the situation oscillates between too much water in the wet season and too little water in the dry season Access to and availability of water were seen by local communities as major limitations for aquatic and agricultural production impacting on functions that include the lake fishery intensive dry season rice crops recession rice rainfed rice and floating rice by the lakeside For both fish and rice production water and water management are determined principally by the natural flooding of the Tonle Sap Lake This study is based on a community survey on water access availability and management and was conceived out of the AAS consultation process and was developed to help identify existing practices in water use and management as well as best practices where lessons can be learned and promising activities scaled out to other communities The community survey also aims to understand identify and analyze constraints and opportunities related to water and includes a gender perspective to better understand the role of women in water management and use
