
Critical geopolitics: discourse, difference, and dissent

Abstract. In the 1980s international relations theory has been undergoing a major methodological and theoretical debate which has challenged much of the recent disciplinary orthodoxy. This has been inspired by the introduction of contemporary critical social theory and poststructuralist themes into international relations by a new generation of practitioners. Given the close intellectual proximity of international relations to political geography's concerns with geopolitics, these current debates are of great relevance to any attempt to retheorise global politics from the perspective of political geography. Although the recent revival of interest in political geography has led to a considerable interest in rethinking the historiography of the subdiscipline and to reevaluating its tainted past, the necessary accompanying theoretical rethinking has not progressed in a similar fashion. The theoretical issues discussed in the contemporary international relations literature have much to offer political geographers in pursuing this important task.

1 Geography and a world in crisis

As a recent edited collection of essays in geography has it, the world is in crisis (Johnston and Taylor, 1989). Hunger, environmental degradation, war, poverty, premature death, greenhouse effects, ... the tale of woe goes on. Simultaneously the world is astir politically as the cold war systems crumble, economic arrangements change ever more rapidly, new agendas for political action emerge, and the security discourses of the last four decades are increasingly challenged. In the fields of social and political theory too the old certainties are no longer so certain. Signposts (sic!) as to which intellectual direction to follow in these new times are not reliable; positivism and the models of the natural sciences are widely criticised. In this theoretical and political vortex geography in general, and political geography in particular, finds itself searching for direction, facing bigger challenges than ever to say something coherent about what is going on.

In this paper I explore some of the current theoretical controversies 'over the disciplinary fence' in the field of international relations. There, few answers will be easily found; but at least some very interesting questions are available for our perusal and the theoretical debates suggest some critical approaches that may be very useful. The multiplicity of theoretical perspectives and the diversity of methodological projects in international politics parallels some of geography's diverse approaches to contemporary political life. For this reason I explore contemporary discussions there to offer some insight into what geographers might say about the contemporary state of the world in a theoretically and politically informed manner. A secondary purpose in writing this paper is to link arguments made elsewhere (Dalby, 1988; 1990a; 1990b; 1991) about critical geopolitics more explicitly to literatures in geography and in international relations.

A comprehensive analysis of the state of either international relations or political geography is beyond the scope of this paper. In this paper, I do not deal with the material concerned with local and state politics. Neither can I exhaustively discuss all the relevant social theory arguments and literatures. Instead I explore one particular theme, that of the contemporary critical approaches to international studies,

Critical Assumptions Kenneth Knowles Ruthven,1984-09-06 This book is an historical survey of some important theories of literary criticism which is designed to introduce more advanced students of English and other European literature to the nature and origin of these theories and ultimately to help them clarify their own attitudes to literature Professor Ruthven s approach is to bring together and analyse examples of the way in which major writers and critics have dealt with the critical issues raised by different kinds of writing He emphasizes throughout the variety of critical stances taken at different times in response to the challenge posed by highly original works and he draws on a large number of instances from all the major periods of English literature. The examination of the historical material presented here should encourage students of English as well as other modern European literatures to recognise and re-appraise their own critical assumptions.

Ruined Eden of the Present Gary Richard Thompson, Virgil Llewellyn Lokke, 1981 A recurrent idea in Darrel Abel's criticism of the works of Hawthorne gives this volume its title. The idea of a fallen world and its potential for partial redemption through art and the art of criticism is a theme that weaves in and out of the sixteen essays. The volume as a whole displays an explicit and implicit concern with critical approaches and reflects an awareness of the fictiveness of critical resolutions in a world in which boundaries are constantly under challenge for example those which divide textuality from contextuality. This collection of essays explores the problems the practical critic and teacher has had to face in the shifts in taste, assumptions and methodology in the moves from moral and historical criticism to the New Criticism and to the newer linguistic and semiotic criticism.

The World of Rural Dissenters, 1520-1725 Margaret Spufford, 1995-03-16 There has been dispute amongst social historians about whether only the more prosperous in village society were involved in religious practice. A group of historians working under Dr Spufford's direction have produced a factual solution to this dispute by examining the taxation records of large groups of dissenters and churchwardens and have established that both late Lollard and post-Restoration dissenting belief crossed the whole taxable spectrum. We can no longer speak of religion as being the prerogative of either weavers and threshers or on the other hand of village elites. The group also examined the idea that dissent descended in families and concluded that this was not only true but that such families were the least mobile population group so far examined in early modern England probably because they were closely knit and tolerated in their communities. The cause of the apparent correlation of dissenting areas and areas of early by-employment was also questioned. The group concludes that travelling merchants and carriers on the road network carried with them radical ideas and dissenting print the content of which is examined as well as goods. In her own substantial chapter Dr Spufford draws together the pieces of the huge mosaic constructed by her team of contributors, adds radical ideas of her own and disagrees with much of the prevailing wisdom on the function of religion in the late seventeenth century. Professor Patrick Collinson has contributed a critical conclusion to the volume. This is a book which breaks new ground and which offers much original material for ecclesiastical, cultural, demographic and economic historians of the period.

A Synoptic Hamlet: a Critical-Synoptic Edition of the Second Quarto and First Folio Texts of Hamlet Jesús Tronch-Pérez, Jesús Tronch, 2002 A Synoptic Hamlet is an alternative response to the editorial problems of this multiple text play. Like most critical editions it presents the early texts in a manner helpful to the general reader by modernizing spelling and punctuation and emending non-sensical readings. However it does not hide the text's diversity by exclusively selecting readings from either the Second Quarto or the First Folio in order to reconstruct a single reading.

version corresponding to the authentic Hamlet Rather it makes their significant variants immediately available in the line itself offering alternative editorial interpretations of identical or similar readings at certain points Thus the reader can have a direct appreciation of the divergence and similarity between these early texts from which the Hamlet of today is known
