

the management processes the patients are required to undertake (Cohen, Chavez & Chehimi, 2007).

During the twentieth century, there has been great improvement on the technology which has enabled the healthcare providers to improve on the management of the patients' health. There is more usage of machines hence more efficiency although the patients lack the human attachment of a caregiver (Guillotta & Bloom, 2003). There are also legal controls that have been put in place to ensure that doctors do not intentionally cause harm or even neglect their patients. They do this by ensuring that those who are found guilty of the crime face charges and are answerable to the civil.

The medical surgery nurses must have received proper education in a medical school to ensure that only the qualified staff attends to the critical cases. For an individual to qualify to the position they need to have studied in the medical school for five to seven years which is also followed by a postgraduate degree in the training for the relevant field or the department. This ensures proper mastering of content, gaining the relevant knowledge and skills and also experience in handling of sensitive health cases especially in terminal illnesses.

There are workshops organized by advanced physicians for example the one by Doctor Bub that aims at crating awareness to the learners who in this case are the health practitioners. It is to help them improve on their relationships with patients through communication skills (Bloom, 1996). The health professionals are also reminded that they should live to their title because the term doctor means to be a teacher. The workshops help them to learn from their previous mistakes they make in the course of their professional experiences other than living to suffer from them.

Primary prevention also requires the health professionals to be confident in their practices because it helps them perform well thus avoiding accidents that may occur when one is not sure in him or herself. Believing on one self saves time which would otherwise have been lost when going back to notes that offer suggestions on the diagnosed problem. This helps reduce the patient waiting problem because in most cases one medical practitioner attends to many patients.

The anesthesiology department normally conducts an evaluation in order to assess the condition of the patient before the surgical process take place and also to prepare the patient who is to undergo the process. This is done before and after the surgical procedures and is done outside the theater. The aim is to provide management of pain services after the after the operation procedure and also to observe the response to the operative procedure and the healing process. This helps identify complications that may arise before and after the operative process.
