Enforcing Freedom Kerwin Kaye, 2019-12-17 In 1989 the first drug treatment court was established in Florida inaugurating an era of state supervised rehabilitation Such courts have frequently been seen as a humane alternative to incarceration and the war on drugs Enforcing Freedom offers an ethnographic account of drug courts and mandatory treatment centers as a system of coercion demonstrating how the state uses notions of rehabilitation as a means of social regulation Situating drug courts in a long line of state projects of race and class control Kerwin Kaye details the ways in which the violence of the state is framed as beneficial for those subjected to it He explores how courts decide whether to release or incarcerate participants using nominally colorblind criteria that draw on racialized imagery Rehabilitation is defined as preparation for low wage labor and the destruction of community ties with bad influences a process that turns participants against one another At the same time Kaye points toward the complex ways in which participants negotiate state control in relation to other forms of constraint in their lives sometimes embracing the state s salutary violence as a means of countering their impoverishment Simultaneously sensitive to ethnographic detail and theoretical implications Enforcing Freedom offers a critical perspective on the punitive side of criminal justice reform and points toward alternative paths forward

To Right Historical Wrongs Carmela Murdocca, 2013-10-15 Following World War II liberal nation states sought to address injustices of the past In keeping with trends in other countries Canada's government began to consider its own implication in various past wrongs and in the late twentieth century it began to implement reparative justice initiatives for historically marginalized people Yet despite this shift there are more Indigenous and racialized people in Canadian prisons now than at any other time in history In To Right Historical Wrongs Carmela Murdocca brings together the paradigm of reparative justice and the study of incarceration to examine this disconnect between the political motivations for amending historical injustices and the vastly disproportionate reality of the justice system a troubling reality that is often ignored Drawing on detailed examination of legal cases parliamentary debates government reports media commentary and community sources Murdocca presents a new perspective on discussions of culture based sentencing in an age of both mass incarceration and historical amendment
