portrait of the American postwar family Jennifer Egan about sibling rivalry dark secrets and a young girl's struggle with freedom and artistic desire In the years after World War II the bleak yet beautiful plains of South Dakota still embody all the contradictions the ruggedness and the promise of the old frontier This is a place where you can eat strawberries from wild vines where lightning reveals a boundless horizon where descendants of white settlers and native Indians continue to collide and where for most there are limited options Ren shares a home a family and a passion for dance with her older brother Leon Yet for all they have in common their lives are on remarkably different paths In contrast to Ren a born spitfire Leon is a gentle soul The only boy in their ballet class Leon silently endures often brutal teasing Meanwhile Ren excels at everything she touches basking in the delighted gaze of their father whom Leon seems to disappoint no matter how hard he tries As the years pass Ren and Leon's parents fight with increasing frequency and ferocity Their father a cattle broker spends more time on the road his sporadic homecomings both yearned for and dreaded by the children And as Ren and Leon grow up they grow apart They grasp whatever they can to stay afloat a word of praise a grandmother's outstretched hand the seductive attention of a stranger as Ren works to save herself crossing the border into a larger more hopeful world while Leon embarks on a path of despair and self destruction Tender searing and unforgettable The Distance Home is a profoundly American story spanning decades a tale of haves and have nots of how our ideas of winning and losing success and failure lead us inevitably into various problems with empathy and caring for one another It's a portrait of beauty and brutality in which the author's compassionate narration allows us to sympathize in turn with everyone involved A riveting family saga for the ages one of the best books I've read in years Mary Karr Saunders debut is an exquisite searing portrait of family and of people coping with whatever life throws at them while trying to keep close to one another Booklist starred review
