Emerging Partnerships: Current Research in Language and Literacy

Edited by David Wray

The development of language and literacy has been one of the most widely researched fields in education. This research has, however, not been consistently spread over the range of areas encompassed by the title 'language and literacy'. Because of the recognition that its role in the education process is crucial, the teaching of reading has traditionally received a great deal of attention from researchers, who have studied the nature of the reading process and the efficacy of particular teaching decisions. Reading has always had a very high profile with current debates (Wray, 1989), centred around approaches to teaching, gaining national press coverage. More recently other aspects of language and literacy have begun to be more intensively researched and discussed. The nature of the writing process and its teaching have come under a great deal of scrutiny, with influence from the seminal work of Graves (1983) in the USA and the National Writing Project in the United Kingdom. Research interest in the 'second R' has mushroomed over the past five years, a situation evidenced by the fact that in this collection, with contributors given a free choice of topic, four out of the nine papers are focused upon aspects of writing.

There are also signs that research interest in spoken language, or 'oracy', has begun to increase anew. This area received some attention in the early 1970s, and was given a high profile in the Bullock report (DES, 1975), yet has retained the feeling of 'more work to be done'. The inclusion of speaking and listening as an attainment target in the National Curriculum (DES, 1989) seems to have sparked off further, welcome, interest (see MacLure et al., 1988, and Conson, 1988). Two of the papers in this collection have oral language as their focus.

Other areas of burgeoning interest have been the use of new technology as a tool for developing language and literacy (Ewing, 1985; Wray,
