Enabling Or Disabling Local Government Choices For The Future:

Enabling Or Disabling Local Government Steve Leach, Howard Davis, 1996 Over the past ten years or so there has been an unprecedented amount of change in the world of British local government for instance the growth of compulsory competitive tendering the opportunity for schools to opt out of local authority control the new responsibilities for community care and the introduction of the community charge or poll tax and its subsequent replacement with council tax And now local government is in the throes of a major and controversial reorganization There have been several books which have described such changes but this one represents the first systematic attempt to draw out the overall implications of these changes for the future role of local government as an institution It argues that there are major strategic choices of direction facing local authorities and that these choices will shape management structures and many other aspects of local choice The book provides a clear framework of analysis to enable readers to understand the forces at work in this particularly turbulent and unstable period of local government s history and to see where they are leading Local government and democracy in Britain Neil Barnett, J. A. Chandler, 2023-11-14 Local government in the UK is in crisis It is now neither local in terms of the geography and populations of its principle units nor does it truly govern in these areas As this book reveals over the previous 200 years local government has moved from a system in which local interests held governance over localities to one in which central government and national and multi national agencies such as corporate businesses hold governance over local and community decision making These changes seriously undermine the important role that local government can play in liberal democracy in the UK The book explains the nature of local government today and asks if there is any possibility of change

Power and City Governance Alan DiGaetano, 1999 Local Strategic Partnerships Hilary Russell, 2001 This practical report draws on the experiences of New Commitment to Regeneration NCR pathfinders which have been an influential model for LSPs to identify lessons for good practice Amply illustrated by case studies the report demonstrates what works in effective strategic partnerships and highlights implications for partner organisations and the role of government It locates current developments in the context of evolving urban policy identifies critical success factors for strategic partnerships discusses the dimensions of whole systems change necessary for partnership working indicates key challenges and tasks for LSPs and their partners points to the need to redefine central local relationships vbTab vbTab Introduction to Public Administration in the Philippines , 2003 Decentralizing The Civil Service Rhodes, R.A. W., Carmichael, P., McMillan, J, 2003-02-01 The authors also explore two controversial propositions First they ask whether Britain is moving from the unitary strong executive of the Westminster model to a differentiated polity characterized by institutional fragmentation Second they consider whether an unintended consequence of recent changes is a hollowing out of the state Is the British executive losing functions downwards to devolved governments and special purpose bodies and outwards to regional offices and agencies with a resulting loss of central capacity Substantial empirical data both quantitative and qualitative has been amassed here in order to give answers to these questions

Foster,Francis J. Plowden,1996 This is a comprehensive account of the changes that have taken place in British government in recent years since 1979 but more especially since 1988 It argues that and explains why there has been a general decline in competence and ability to deliver good government Ministers are increasingly overloaded their long standing relationships with civil servants have altered and the power of Parliament has declined And the machinery of government has been transformed at one level by changes in the use of Cabinet and at another by privatization contractorization and the creation of executive agencies Any new government will find government transformed to a point where most memories of how it used to work in the 1970s are irrelevant The State Under Stress argues that while the clock cannot be turned back urgent reforms are needed if democracy is not to be further undermined
