THE SCOTS MAGAZINE

For a concise history of The Scots Magazine, one could hardly improve on its obituary published in the Gentleman's Magazine for July 1828 (pp. 60-61):

"On the 7th of July, the copyright of the Scots' Magazine was offered to public sale, at an auction-room in Edinburgh, for the price of £50, and was not sold; the stock was exposed at £475, and the stock and copyright at £500, without effecting a sale.

"The Scots' Magazine was begun and published, by monthly numbers, in Edinburgh, in January 1739, by Messrs. Murray and Cochrane, printers, and was continued under the same firm, till the end of the year 1760. The copyright was then purchased by Messrs. Watson and Co. booksellers, who began a new series with 1764, volume 5th, and continued the publication till the year 1800.

"It then came into the hands of Mr. Constable, who, in August of that year, the first number of another new series, under the title of the seventy-eighth year from the commencement, which, in August of that year, the first number of another new series, under the title of 'The Edinburgh Magazine, and Literary Miscellany, a new Series of the Scots' Magazine'...

"Each year formed a volume, down to 1817, when the work being enlarged, the year's publication, or twelve monthly numbers, have been divided into two volumes. At the end of the last year, the volumes in all amounted to ninety-six."

Volumes 1-25 of a 'new Series' of The Scots Magazine, a monthly miscellany of Scottish life and letters, was published from December 1817 to May 1800 (superseding Scotian Church's). Since April 1824, 'a revival of The Scots Magazine first published in 1739' has been published by the Saint Andrews Society. Neither of these latter series has been reviewed here but they could be consulted for numerically-related events of the past century.

During almost the entire period of publication, there was great concern about, and controversy over, the developing Scottish banking system. Scottish Banknotes, by James Douglas (London, 1875), provides a useful guide to a sometimes seemingly chaotic situation, although the private banks which issued only small-denomination notes are not included.
