

philosophies and sciences were assimilated in worldview of Islam, cultivating the Islamic sciences.

Muslims' Contributions

THE DENSITY of the Muslims' contributions can best be realised by recapitulating the most significant of their activities, considering its positive impact on Europe's struggle to break the cult of barbarism – the Dark Ages.³

Medical Science

SINCE the science of medicine is important to human welfare, its advancement has been continuous from ancient times to the present day. The contribution of Muslims to this area is immense indeed. Drawing on the medical lore of the Greeks, Persians and Egyptians, the Muslim world eagerly adapted all the available knowledge in this field. Recognising importance of the medical science, the Arabs raised physicians to a high social rank, rewarding them with generous emoluments.

The science of medicine is allied, in the Muslim as in the Hellenistic world, to the study of philosophy, flourished in every caliphate and court of Islamic Empire. The Arab scientists made significant advances in the art of healing, especially in the use of curative drugs. The world's pharmacopoeia is rich with these discoveries. They established hospitals far and wide and provided medical care to prisoners. They made careful clinical observations of diseases. They did creative work in the field of optics. The greatest contributions of Islamic medical scientists to Europe of the middle Ages, however, were in the encyclopedic field. The Persian Al Razi (Rhazes in Europe: 865-925 A.D.) wrote an important encyclopedia of medicine, Al Haei (Continens). It sums up the knowledge of medicine possessed by the Arabs in the 10th century as gleaned from Greek, Persian and Hindu sources. It was translated and published in Sicily in 1279 A.D.

The greatest of the Muslim encyclopedists was Ibn Sina (Avicenna in Europe: 980-1037 A.D.). One of the world's great intellects, Avicenna had an encyclopedic mind and a photographic memory. By the age of twenty-one, he had read and absorbed all works in the royal library of the Sultan of Bokhara and presented to the world the final codification of Graeco-Arabic medical thought. Translated into Latin by Gerard of Cremona in the 12th century, this work became
