simpler time before World War II divided the family Caraway revels in the life her family lived on a southern Illinois hilltop in Murphysboro township marveling at the mix of commonplace and adventure she experienced in her childhood She remembers her first day of school walking three miles to the wondrous one room building with her siblings reminisces about strolling through the countryside with her mother investigating the various plants and flowers fruits and nuts and recollects her fascination with the Indian relics she found buried near her home a hobby she shared with her father She also writes of seeing Gone with the Wind on the big screen at the Hippodrome in Murphysboro of learning to sew dresses for her dolls and of idyllic life on the farm milking cows hatching chicks feeding pigs Along with her personal memories Caraway includes interviews with neighbors and many fascinating photographs with detailed captions that make the images come alive A delightful follow up to her father's popular Foothold on a Hillside Memories of a Southern Illinoisan Caraway's book is a pleasant change from the typical accounts of southern Illinois before during and after the Great Depression Instead of hardscrabble grit Growing Up in a Land Called Egypt offers a refreshingly different view of the period and is certain to be embraced by southern Illinois natives as well as anyone interested in the experiences of a rural family that thrived despite the difficult times The author's lighthearted prose self deprecating humor and genuine affection for her family make reading this book a rich and memorable experience
