

were not significant among respondents' ranking of the constraints to reported. The coefficients of determination ( $R^2$ ) showed that 72% of the independent were in agreement with the findings of the committee. Accessible supply and chemicals were identified as the main causal constraint, followed by inadequate spraying personnel. Inadequate log chain management was the least constraint.

The results are consistent with the findings of Adeniyi et al. (2004b) who identified outbreaks as the cause major spraying programs to include insufficient supply of chemicals, shortage of喷洒器 and inadequate funds for spraying machines. They also reported that the government spraying programs to control pests and diseases has not resulted in full potential because it has not been able to fulfill its mandate of ensuring that access to accessible basic tools is poor between July and December.

Access to pesticides was inadequate spraying personnel. According to the farmers, the number of spraying personnel in the area is less compared to the size of crops farms in the area. As much as 70% of the farmers interviewed the period for additional spraying personnel in their communities.

Controlled spraying and spraying machine delay spraying, the most important, farmers are given the chemicals to spray their crops before their arrival. In addition, some farmers also reported that because the garage were good and the basic oil were consumed, they failed to spray the crops as much as possible instead of targeting the crops. Farmers also identified that of chemical spray is a constraint. This constraint was the least constraint.

4. Conclusion

From a farmer's perspective, the government spraying programs which were involved in causing pests and diseases affecting crops production in the country has been ineffective in the study area as a result of problems facing the implementation of the programs. Equipment, pests spraying and funding to follow the recommended spraying regime pose as big challenges to the successful implementation of the government spraying programs in the country. There is therefore the need for the Government to ensure that right chemicals and chemicals are made available at the right time to ensure an effective spraying regime. In addition, CDEA/PPC must closely monitor the work of the spraying personnel to ensure that they do a thorough job.

The Oxford Handbook of Africa and Economics Célestin Monga,Justin Yifu Lin,2015-07-02 For a long time economic research on Africa was not seen as a profitable venture intellectually or professionally few researchers in top ranked institutions around the world chose to become experts in the field This was understandable the reputation of Africa centered economic research was not enhanced by the well known limitations of economic data across the continent Moreover development economics itself was not always fashionable and the broader discipline of economics has had its ups and downs and has been undergoing a major identity crisis because it failed to predict the Great Recession Times have changed many leading researchers including a few Nobel laureates have taken the subject of Africa and economics seriously enough to devote their expertise and creativity to it. They have been amply rewarded the richness complexities and subtleties of African societies civilizations rationalities and ways of living have helped renew the humanities and the social sciences and economics in particular to the point that the continent has become the next major intellectual frontier to researchers from around the world. In collecting some of the most authoritative statements about the science of economics and its concepts in the African context this handbook the first of two volumes opens up the diverse acuity of commentary on exciting topics and in the process challenges and stimulates the quest for knowledge. Wide ranging in its scope themes language and approaches this volume explores examines and assesses economic thinking on Africa and Africa's contribution to the discipline. The editors bring a set of powerful resources to this endeavor most notably a team of internationally renowned economists whose diverse viewpoints are complemented by the perspectives of philosophers political scientists and anthropologists.

Aging and Health in Africa Pranitha Maharaj, 2012-08-16 Population aging is a matter of global concern. It often occurs in tandem with changes in the health profile of the population. In Africa many countries are already facing a high burden of communicable diseases. However as more and more children survive childhood and move on to adult years and old age they are also more likely to experience health problems associated with the aging process. Population aging in Africa is occurring in the context of high levels of poverty changing family structures an immense disease burden fragile health systems and weak or poorly managed government institutions. This book shows that aging is likely to lead to increased social and economic demands for the continent. However most national governments in Africa have not begun to address the issue of how to respond effectively to the needs of the older population. This will require a better understanding of the socio economic and demographic situation of the older population in Africa. This book fills the gaps that exist by exploring the social realities of population aging in Africa. It also focuses on the policy and programmatic responses gaps and future challenges related to aging across the continent.
