Disturbed children constitute a sizeable and varied percentage of the child population. Generally two to three percent have severe longstanding problems and 20 to 30 percent have current more transient problems. While preventive efforts are needed it also seems obvious that many children will continue to function in a disturbed and disturbing fashion and will continue to require various kinds of therapeutic interventions. These interventions will mainly occur in school and community settings. This book attempts to present a picture of some fairly popular models of intervention and to consider important related issues. There are probably as many ways of coping with disturbed children as there are creative caring persons attempting to do the coping. A growing literature exists on ways of conceptualizing and intervening with such children. It was believed by the editor that an organized body of information on these concepts and techniques would prove useful to student and practitioner. A danger with such collections is that if they mainly portray novel or atypical techniques while informative the book quickly becomes passe and of limited value. This book's focus is on contemporary thought but also on orientations that have stood the test of some time and the stability of the underlying theory.

Day Treatment for Children with Emotional Disorders G.K. Farley, S.G. Zimet, 2013-11-11

The life span of day treatment for children in the United States is relatively short covering a period of about 50 years. Although the first 20 years saw little growth in the number of centers operating around the country the concept of day treatment was recognized by the Joint Commission on Mental Illness and Health in 1961 as the most significant treatment innovation of this century. Enthusiasm for this treatment modality gained impetus from growing dissatisfaction among many mental health care providers who had no choice but to place children in a highly restrictive hospital environment. Day treatment did not carry the stigma associated with inpatient placement. The children could now remain with their own families and within their own communities. The parents could be actively included in their child's treatment. This new modality avoided the short and long term negative effects of institutionalization and there was a favorable cost discrepancy between day and inpatient mental health services. In more recent years there has been growing evidence of the efficacy of day treatment as an intensive therapeutic environment for children and their parents. Despite these advantages day treatment has continued to be underutilized in favor of inpatient treatment by both the psychiatric community and third party payers. Only recently is it being acknowledged by some insurers as a therapeutically sound and financially advantageous alternative to inpatient services. Consequently it is showing signs of intense growth nationally.
