The Media, Cultural Control and Government in Singapore Terence Lee, 2010-05-06 This book explores this inherent contradiction present in most facets of Singaporean media cultural and political discourses and identifies the key regulatory strategies and technologies that the ruling People Action Party PAP employs to regulate Singapore media and culture and thus govern the thoughts and conduct of Singaporeans It establishes the conceptual links between government and the practice of cultural policy arguing that contemporary cultural policy in Singapore has been designed to shape citizens into accepting and participating in the rationales of government Outlining the historical development of cultural policy including the recent expansion of cultural regulatory and administrative practices into the creative industries Terence Lee analyzes the attempts by the Singaporean authorities to engage with civil society the ways in which the media is used to market the PAP's policies and leadership and the implications of the internet for the practice of governmental control Overall The Media Cultural Control and Government in Singapore offers an original approach towards the rethinking of the relationship between media culture and politics in Singapore demonstrating that the many contradictory discourses around Singapore only make sense once the politics and government of the media and culture are understood

Information and communications technology in government Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts,2011-07-05 This report examines the Government s new strategy for ICT and the practical steps necessary to implement its 30 key actions The strategy is ambitious with some 30 actions to be delivered in just 24 months However it lacks quantitative targets or a baseline of current performance which will make it difficult to measure success The implementation plan due in August 2011 should include milestones on which the government can be held to account The Committee welcomes the differences between this and previous strategies The Efficiency and Reform Group ERG will insist on shorter more iterative projects that take no more than two to three years will step in and micro manage a department s project if required will promote greater input from smaller business suppliers and will require a focus on designing services around the customer Yet there are serious concerns about the strategy It lacks detail about the Government s approach to cyber security which is worrying given the drive for more government services to move online Government also has not yet assessed the size of its existing ICT workforce or the number of ICT people or the skills it will need to deliver its strategy ERG has only a small team of experts to keep on top of more than 50 major projects The Committee is concerned that ERG could not provide any detail on the nature or the number of its major projects HM
