Why Don't Jumbo Jets Flap Their Wings? David Alexander, 2009-06-02 What do a bumble bee and a 747 jet have in common It's not a trick question The fact is they have quite a lot in common They both have wings They both fly And they're both ideally suited to it They just do it differently Why Don't Jumbo Jets Flap Their Wings offers a fascinating explanation of how nature and human engineers each arrived at powered flight What emerges is a highly readable account of two very different approaches to solving the same fundamental problems of moving through the air including lift thrust turning and landing The book traces the slow and deliberate evolutionary process of animal flight in birds bats and insects over millions of years and compares it to the directed efforts of human beings to create the aircraft over the course of a single century Among the many questions the book answers Why are wings necessary for flight How do different wings fly differently When did flight evolve in animals What vision knowledge and technology was needed before humans could learn to fly Why are animals and aircrafts perfectly suited to the kind of flying they do David E Alexander first describes the basic properties of wings before launching into the diverse challenges of flight and the concepts of flight aerodynamics and control to present an integrated view that shows both why birds have historically had little influence on aeronautical engineering and exciting new areas of technology where engineers are successfully borrowing ideas from animals accreting binaries The past decade has seen an impressive increase in multi wavelength studies It is now known that all black hole binaries in our galaxy are radio sources and most likely their radio emission originates from a powerful jet In addition to the spectacular events related to the ejection of superluminal jets steady jets are known from many systems Compared with their supermassive cousins the nuclei of active galaxies stellar mass X ray binaries have the advantage of varying on time scales accessible within a human life sometimes even much shorter than a second This has led to the first detailed studies of the relation between accretion and ejection It is even possible that excluding their soft periods the majority of the power in galactic sources lies in the jets and not in the accretion flows This means that until a few years ago we were struggling with a physical problem accretion onto compact objects without considering one of the most important components of the system Models that associate part of the high energy emission and even the fast aperiodic variability to the jet itself are now being proposed and jets can no longer be ignored The Invisible Universe Gerrit
