

Fascism vs Dictatorship

Feature	Fascism	Dictatorship
Definition	A far-right, authoritarian ultranationalist ideology and movement characterized by dictatorial power, forcible suppression of opposition, and strong regimentation of society and the economy.	A form of government where a single leader or group holds absolute power, without effective constitutional limitations.
Ideological Basis	Fascism is based on extreme nationalism, often coupled with racism, and aims to create a totalitarian state that controls all aspects of life.	Dictatorships can be ideologically neutral or aligned with various political ideologies, including communism, fascism, or even democracy in the form of a 'benevolent dictatorship'.
Governance	Led by a single leader who embodies the state and its ideology. The government seeks to control all aspects of public and private life, promoting a unified national community.	Power is centralized in the hands of a single ruler or a small group. Governance structures and the extent of control over society can vary widely.
Economic System	The state often controls the economy to serve national interests, with policies that can include corporatism or state intervention in the market.	Economic policies can vary widely, from free-market capitalism to state-controlled economies, depending on the dictator's objectives.
Political System	Fascism rejects democratic governance, advocating for a one-party state with absolute power vested in the leader.	Dictatorships may emerge from various political systems and can maintain a facade of democracy, such as sham elections, or dispense with it altogether.
