Eight Pillars of Prosperity Associate Professor of Philosophy James Allen, James Allen, 2014-09-25 Prosperity rests upon a moral foundation It is popularly supposed to rest upon an immoral foundation that is upon trickery sharp practice deception and greed One commonly hears even an otherwise intelligent man declare that No man can be successful in business unless he is dishonest thus regarding business prosperity a good thing as the effect of dishonesty a bad thing Such a statement is superficial and thoughtless and reveals a total lack of knowledge of moral causation as well as a very limited grasp of the facts of life It is as though one should sow henbane and reap spinach or erect a brick house on a quagmire things impossible in the natural order of causation and therefore not to be attempted The spiritual or moral order of causation is not different in principle but only in nature The same law obtains in things unseen in thoughts and deeds as in things seen in natural phenomena Man sees the processes in natural objects and acts in accordance with them but not seeing the spiritual processes he imagines that they do not obtain and so he does not act in harmony with them
