Going Their Separate Ways Agrarian Transformation In Kenya 1930 195:

Going Their Separate Ways Robert M. Maxon, 2003 From 1930 1950 Vihiga and Gusiland relatively similar regions of western Kenya went their separate ways and in opposite directions This account of the contrasting experiences of the Vihiga and Gusiiland provides a framework for enhanced understanding of the history of agrarian change in Africa A Failed Eldorado Priscilla M. Shilaro, 2008 This work explores Britain's attempt to take land from the Bantu Luyia peoples of Western Kenya for gold mining following the discovery of gold in the North Kavirondo NK reserve in 1931 The discovery led to the Kenyan gold rush in which local European settler farmers and mining prospectors converged on Kakamega The presence of mining prospectors in Western Kenya and the move to transform a rural agrarian terrain into an industrial one had important economic political socio cultural medical and environmental ramifications for the inhabitants This book illuminates the struggles of mine workers and dispossessed African households by looking at their actions and reactions toward the emerging British colonial venture of the region Fundamentally this work captures the largely undocumented histories of the common people who lived through Kenya's failed eldorado Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, 1986-04 The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists is the premier public resource on scientific and technological developments that impact global security Founded by Manhattan Project Scientists the Bulletin's iconic Doomsday Clock stimulates solutions for a safer world Land Law and Land Ownership in Africa Robert Debusmann, 1996 Cotton, 1930 Historical Abstracts Eric H. Boehm, 1999 The Catholic Periodical and Literature Index, 1982 Documentation Politique Internationale, 1983 Has supplements American Book Publishing Record, 1985 Comprehensive Dissertation Index: Business & economics, A-K, 1984 International Books in Print, 1986 Comprehensive Dissertation Index, 1984 Subject Guide to Books in Print, 1975 The Agrarian Question in Kenya Stephen Walter Orvis, 1997 Tackles central questions in the literature on African agrarian social structure and rural development Remarkably broad in scope rich in conceptual and theoretical content and it speaks directly to development policy Few volumes attempt so much and fewer yet do it as well Frank W Holmquist Hampshire College Amherst Provides new insights into debates about agricultural development in Africa through combining a historical and comparative perspective with a detailed case study Reveals the relationship between inequality and agricultural productivity to be much more complex than the current wisdom assumes A compelling picture Victoria Bernal University of California Irvine Kenya has been a model of market based development for many years widely touted because of early and significant economic successes Recent slowing in the growth of agriculture however has meant slower growth overall Stephen Orvis argues that a shortage of labor at the household level especially women's labor explains this stagnation In this important study Orvis critiques structural adjustment and delineates the ways in which market forces have been largely responsible for Kenya's gradual shift toward a less agrarian society He also explores the ways in which market forces have spawned the development of social and political networks that have little interest in improving agricultural growth and he provides the first detailed account of rural participation in the multiparty electoral process. Drawing on intensive field work in Kisii District, a densely populated area in the tea and coffee zones of western Kenya, he documents the evolution of more than 100 families over three generations and the last 50 years, plumbing their current and historical economic strategies. He uses the insights generated by this micro-analytic exercise to reinterpret a number of other peasant studies done in Kenya and elsewhere. As a result, he is able to draw convincing implications from his work for a surprisingly large range of issues central to our understanding of Kenyan sociology, rural development, and politics of interest to Kenya and development scholars alike. Stephen Orvis is associate professor of government at Hamilton College.
