

OFFICER'S FULL DRESS

The officers of the Chasseurs à Cheval of the Guard's full dress did not really change very much during the course of the Empire.

There were certainly a few differences in the trimmings of the dolmans and the pelisses; however the contemporary artistic reference is still the portrait of Lieutenant Drouadonné by Géricault.

The sabres of the officers in the Chasseurs were very rich and the factory at Versailles was the principal supplier of such weapons.

For more information on this subject it is suggested that Michel Pélard's study on arms and equipment be consulted.

The officer in this plate has been given a Year XIII model light cavalry sabre.

Junior officer -
lieutenants
and captains
were thought
to be junior
officers -
wearing full
dress towards 1805.

On parade, the officer used a natural panther skin shabrack.
The head was placed on the rear part of the saddle.
The tail therefore was at the front and hung to the left as a general rule. The stirrup leathers were made of red morocco and the stirrups were etched and gold-leaved.
The harness included golden buckles and a series of gilded brass decorations just like the plate on the front and the chest pieces.
