Abstract

We present a new approach to introducing an extensional propositional equality in Intensional Type Theory. Our construction is based on the observation that there is a sound, intensional setoid model in Intensional Type theory with a proof-irrelevant universe of propositions and η -rules for Π - and Σ -types. The Type Theory corresponding to this model is decidable, has no irreducible constants and permits large eliminations, which are essential for universes.

Keywords. Type Theory, categorical models.

1. Introduction and Summary

In Intensional Type Theory (see e.g. [11]) we differentiate between a decidable definitional equality (which we denote by $=$) and a propositional equality type ($\text{Id}_\sigma(-, -)$ for any given type σ) which requires proof. Typing only depends on definitional equality and hence is decidable.

In Intensional Type Theory the type corresponding to the principle of extensionality

$$\begin{aligned} \text{Ext}_{\lambda x \in \sigma. \tau(x)} &\equiv \Pi_{f, g \in (\Pi_{x \in \sigma} (\Pi_{y \in \tau(x)}))} \\ &\quad (\Pi_{x \in \sigma} \text{Id}_{\tau(x)}(f(x), g(x))) \\ &\quad \rightarrow \text{Id}_{\Pi_{x \in \sigma. \tau(x)}}(f, g) \end{aligned}$$ is not inhabited. To see this let $\sigma = \tau = \text{Nat}$ and $f = \lambda x \in \text{Nat}. x$, $g = \lambda x \in \text{Nat}. x + 0$, where addition is defined s.t. $x \neq x + 0$. Using Nat -elimination we can show that $\Pi_{x \in \text{Nat}} \text{Id}_{\text{Nat}}(f(x), g(x))$ is inhabited but $\text{Id}_{\text{Nat} \rightarrow \text{Nat}}(f, g)$ is not, because f and g have different normal forms.

It has been an open problem how to extend Intensional Type Theory s.t. Ext is inhabited without destroying other fundamental properties. Ext is provable in Extensional Type Theory [10], where propositional and definitional equality are identified, but then equality and type checking become undecidable. We may introduce a constant of type Ext but then, using the elimination constant for Id , we can also define irreducible terms at other types (like Nat). We say that such a theory is not adequate because we can construct closed terms of type Nat which are not reducible to numerals.

The problem of extensionality in Intensional Type Theory has been extensively studied by Martin Hofmann [5]. His basic insight is that extensional equality can be modeled by an intensional model construction such as the setoid model, where every closed type is interpreted by a type and an equivalence relation. However, a naïve version of the setoid model does not work because it does not satisfy all the required definitional equalities. In [6] Hofmann presents a solution using a modified interpretation of families. Unfortunately, this approach does not allow definitions of sets or propositions by recursion (large eliminations), in particular this prohibits the introduction of universes.

Our solution is also based on the setoid model but as the metatheory, where the construction takes place, we use an extension of Intensional Type Theory by a universe of propositions Prop, such that all proofs of a proposition are definitionally equal. Moreover, we assume that the η -rules for Π -types and Σ -types (surjective pairing) hold in the metatheory. We show that this extension of Intensional Type Theory is decidable. Inside our metatheory we define an intensional model which corresponds to a Type Theory – the object theory – with the following properties:

1. Definitional equality (and hence typechecking) is decidable.
2. Ext is inhabited.
3. The theory is adequate, i.e. all closed natural numbers are definitionally equal to numerals.
4. Large eliminations (e.g. a simply typed universe) can be interpreted.
