Violence-Supportive Cognition and Implicit Theories in Aggressive and Violent Behaviors: Implications for Violent Extremism

Massil Benbouriche and Olivier Vanderstukken

What goes through the minds of violent offenders when they exhibit aggressive and violent behaviors? How are they able to use violence while being aware of the harm caused by their actions? Do they genuinely believe violence can be an appropriate mean to an end? Such questions about the role of cognition in aggressive and violent behaviors are central in criminology and forensic psychology (Gannon Ward, Beech, & Fisher, 2007). Offense-supportive attitudes, including violence-supportive cognition, are a criminological need with one of the strongest effect sizes in the Risk-Need-Responsivity model of offender rehabilitation (Andrews & Bonta, 2010) and are therefore an important treatment target in violent offender rehabilitation programs (Polaschek & Collie, 2004; Polaschek, Calvert, & Gannon, 2009). In this chapter, we aim to highlight the relevance of violence-supportive cognition and their underlying cognitive structures—the implicit theories—in violent extremism. Specifically, we assume that violent extremism is a special case of violent behavior rather than a fundamentally different entity—which does not preclude the existence of specific features. Violence-supportive cognition is posited to play a similar role in violent extremism and is therefore an important assessment and treatment target when working with violent extremists.

OFFENSE- AND VIOLENCE-SUPPORTIVE COGNITION: THEORETICAL BACKGROUND

Analysis of cognition is a central topic in the study of criminal behaviors (Banse Koppehele-Gossel, Kistemaker, Werner, & Schmidt, 2013). In criminology, Sykes and Matza (1957) were among the first authors to highlight the role of rationalizations and justifications in the etiology of criminal

Social Work and the Psychosocial Journey Out of Far-Right Extremism Danny W. Carroll II, 2025-09-03. Over the last 30 years, domestic far-right extremism has risen to become the greatest threat to peace and safety in the United States. In the last few years alone, racialized, minoritized, and marginalized individuals and communities have been increasingly forced to feel the pain and experience the consequences of domestic far-right terrorism. Supposing academics, community leaders, and elected officials seek to combat the rising threat of far-right extremism in the United States, a greater focus must be paid to the lived experiences of men and women seeking to exit extremist groups. This study aimed to better understand the psychosocial processes involved in the disengagement and/or de-radicalization journey of former far-right extremists. Additionally, this study sought to understand better the potential role social work could play in the disengagement and de-radicalization of far-right extremists seeking to exit a life of hate and extremism. A constructivist-grounded theory approach provided the framework for this qualitative study. Semi-structured interviews with 19 former white nationalist extremists recruited through community informants and snowball sampling were used to answer the research question: What are the psychosocial processes involved in the disengagement and de-radicalization journey of former far-right extremists, and how do they develop in society? To date, there has not been a study located utilizing constructivist-grounded theory in disengagement and de-radicalization studies. Additionally, a theory of disengagement and de-radicalization has yet to be explored. This study sought to explore and conceptualize latent social patterns and structures within the disengagement and de radicalization journey as a means to construct a theoretical frame to better understand one's journey from a life of hate. Study findings emerged from over 3 500 coded items from 18 transcripts. Eight themes emerged from the data and a theoretical model conceptualizing the psychosocial processes involved in the journey out of far right extremism is introduced.

Reflection and Intuition in a Crisis-Ridden World S. Adil Saribay, Onurcan Yilmaz, 2024-12-06 This book provides a definitive guide to the value of reflective thinking in the modern world showing how today's most fundamental problems are to an important degree based on citizens' thinking styles. The authors highlight the importance of reflection by systematically revealing the causes underlying differences in people's thinking styles and the consequences of thinking in different ways. These different ways of thinking contribute to socio-political views and can result in misunderstandings of complex issues such as beliefs in conspiracy theories and fake news, anti-vaccine attitudes and even fundamentalism and extremism. By training and strengthening reflective thinking in society via education and other means we can encourage individuals to challenge misinformation and their own belief systems around controversial topics. The book also explores the idea that reflection is not enough on its own and examines the shortcomings of reflection and the other skills that complement it positively especially holistic and systems thinking. In doing so the authors highlight how implementing a solid science-based understanding of key issues in education and society at large can contribute to the solution of problems from climate change to economic inequality. By showing how we can put our reflective capacity to good use alongside critically examining reflection in relation to modern problems experienced by humanity this book is a fascinating reading for students, researchers and academics in psychology, politics and the broader social sciences.

Conceptualizing Extreme Beliefs and Behaviors Rik Peels, John Horgan, 2025 This book explores challenging conceptual issues in defining, analyzing, conceptualizing and operationalizing notions such as extremism, radicalization, fanaticism and terrorism. The focus is theoretical but the work is empirically embedded. Rather than adding yet further definitions of phenomena like extremism it seeks to make progress by addressing underlying conceptual issues. Specifically it explores four crucial questions about extremism: fundamentalism, fanaticism, conspiracy theorizing and terrorism. First, how should each of these extreme phenomena be defined in a fruitful manner and what are the desiderata in seeking definitions of each of them Second how should the project of defining and conceptualizing these phenomena be undertaken in terms of necessary and sufficient conditions or family resemblances or INUS conditions and based on datasets or intuitions about particular cases or common understandings in the public debate or yet something else Third what is the role of normativity in defining these extreme phenomena that is the proper place of normative or even pejorative concepts and the normative framework of the researcher Fourth and finally how do the phenomena of extremism fanaticism fundamentalism terrorism and conspiracism relate to one another and to things such as apocalypticism nationalism cults charisma and state terror This second volume in the Extreme Belief and Behavior Series lays the conceptual groundwork that the other volumes in the series will build on Provided by publisher Political Extremism and Rationality Albert Breton, 2002-01-07 Political extremism is widely considered to be the product of irrational behavior The distinguishing feature of this collection by well known economists and political scientists from North America Europe and Australia is to propose a variety of explanations which all insist on the rationality of extremism Contributors use variants of this approach to shed light on subjects such as the conditions under which democratic parties take extremist positions the relationship between extremism and conformism the strategies adopted by revolutionary movements and the reasons why extremism often leads to violence The authors identify four core issues in the study of the phenomenon the nature definition of extremism and its origins in both democratic and authoritarian settings the capacity of democratic political systems to accommodate extremist positions the strategies civil disobedience assassination lynching chosen by extremist groups and the circumstances under which extremism becomes a threat to democracy

Power of Emotions: On the Affective Constitution of Political Struggle Andreas Ventsel, Peeter Selg, 2025-07-11

The emergence of political identities and communities in social media is largely driven by affective responses to current events a tendency facilitated by the dominance of emotionally and visually oriented communication However this mode of community formation leads first to the inherent instability and transience of these groups and second to the oversimplification of complex socio political issues into binary yes no alternatives Within this framework deliberation and argumentation based problem solving become increasingly difficult as discourse is supplanted by emotional reactions that position individuals either for or against an issue Particularly significant is the role of affect and emotion in communication during times of crisis whether in the context of migration the COVID 19 pandemic or the war in Ukraine This affective role is evident in the anchoring of public discourse to personal emotions and the generation and dissemination of hashtags and tags that consolidate diverse phenomena under a unified label Such collective identity coalesces around connective action which is primarily driven either by opposition to the established order or by the reinforcement of a preexisting system's foundations Consequently the emergence of these affective publics must be analyzed within the broader context of power dynamics and evolving forms of identification in the contemporary media sphere forms rooted in shared practices of expression action and interpretation This edited volume will explore the manifestations of affective semiosis meaning making at the socio cultural and discursive levels Cultural context emotional reactions and affective semiosis play a crucial role in shaping how issues related to identity and security are articulated in both domestic and foreign policy as well as in the ways solutions to these challenges are sought By adapting the concept of affective semiosis for the analysis of discursive structures this volume offers an innovative and effective approach to identifying the triggers of emotional reactions in discourse and examining their impact on the construction of political identities fear scenarios misinformation campaigns polarization and other dynamics within networked societies The volume includes both theoretically oriented papers as well as analyses of empirical materials fundamental in shaping political judgments. They consist of preconceived notions about political entities including parties, ideologies, and individuals that affect how information is perceived and interpreted. For instance, an individual with a schema that associates an opposing political party with corruption may filter new information through this lens, leading to an automatic dismissal or reinterpretation of positive news about that party. The influence of schemas is further compounded by the social context in which individuals operate. Group norms and values often dictate what is deemed acceptable within a political discourse. This social interdependence affects not only personal judgments but also broader political ideologies that dominate public discussions.
