Gender, Health and Healthcare Dr Jacqueline H Watts, 2015-04-28 Health status and the experience of working in health care roles are both strongly shaped by gender and although there have been attempts to incorporate gender awareness in both health and employment policies the significance of gender in these areas continues to be marginalised within public debates and academic discourses Taking a social constructionist perspective Watts considers the ways in which gender impacts upon health in all its elements including access technology professionalisation health promotion and health as an important sector of the labour market She discusses gender as a developing and diversified category exploring ideas about masculinity and the fluidity of gender boundaries in determining individual identity Chapters that follow discuss men's and women's health ideology of gender and health specifically exploring different social norms and ideas about male and female health and the dominant ideological association between femaleness and caring working for health with particular focus on the gendered interplay of caring and curing roles technology and changes to gender health and healthcare health promotion as a gendered activity and finally the importance of introducing an intersectional approach beyond gender to articulate a deeper understanding of health in a postmodern context The concluding chapter draws together these themes to underscore the importance of placing gender at the centre of health and health care delivery to fully take account of both the different life and health experiences of men and women and the gendered dimensions of working in health care

Gender Equality in Health Care, 1996 The inquiry presented in this report should be seen in the light of public debate on how the health services meet the needs of women and men in terms of care and support in conjunction with different illnesses Proceeding from the terms of reference laid down for the inquiry we have attempted to document how the health services work from a male as well as a female point of view Nevertheless a key concern of the inquiry has been to establish whether the subordinate position of women in terms of power brought to light by previous government inquiries is also reflected in the health care sector To analyse these issues we have adopted a multidisciplinary approach

Gender, Women and Primary Health Care Renewal World Health Organization, 2010 This discussion paper brings together evidence and experience from around the world focusing on making health systems more gender responsive There is a need to examine the various barriers as well as opportunities in order to make health systems work better for women which has been a special concern for several decades now by using a gender equality and health equity perspective The paper uses a framework that combines WHO's six building blocks for health systems and the primary health care reforms propounded in the World Health Report 2008 on primary health care Furthermore the paper provides examples of what has worked and how and ends with an agenda for action to strengthen the work of policy makers their advisers and development partners as well as practitioners as they seek to integrate gender equality perspectives into health systems strengthening including primary health care PHC reforms

The Changing Face of Medicine Ann K. Boulis, Jerry A. Jacobs, 2010 The number of women practicing medicine in the United States has grown steadily since the late 1960s with women now roughly at parity with men among entering medical students Why did so many women enter American medicine How are women faring professionally and personally once they become physicians Are women transforming the way medicine is practiced To answer these questions The Changing Face of Medicine draws on a wide array of sources including interviews with women physicians and surveys of medical students and practitioners The analysis is set in the twin contexts of a rapidly evolving medical system and profound shifts in gender roles in American society Throughout the book Ann K Boulis and Jerry A Jacobs critically examine common assumptions about women in medicine For example they find that women's entry into medicine has less to do with the decline in status of the profession and more to do with changes in women's roles in contemporary society Women physicians families are becoming more and more like those of other working women Still disparities in terms of specialty practice ownership academic rank and leadership roles endure and barriers to opportunity persist Along the way Boulis and Jacobs address a host of issues among them dual physician marriages specialty choice time spent with patients altruism versus materialism and how physicians combine work and family Women's presence in American medicine will continue to grow beyond the 50 percent mark but the authors question whether this change by itself will make American medicine more caring and more patient centered The future direction of the profession will depend on whether women doctors will lead the effort to chart a new course for health care delivery in the United States
