

FAWLEY COURT

Buckinghamshire, England

The Island Temple

65

The fishing lodge on Temple Island in the Thames at Remenham, Berkshire, was built by James Wyatt around 1771 as an eye-catcher—Fawley Court being on the other side of the river (and, incidentally, in the contiguous county of Buckinghamshire).

Originally, the Temple contained one large room "ornamented in a very expensive manner" in the "Etruscan style." These wall decorations may have been designed by Wyatt himself, and are thought to be among the earliest examples of this kind of decoration in the country. A circular tempietto surmounts the single room, behind which there are later additions. The Temple is familiar to boating enthusiasts since it marks the mile-long course from Henley, and is a highly-favored vantage point for watching the races.

Together with the island upon which it stands, the Temple is now the property of the Henley Royal Regatta.
