creating work for my drama classes where there was an uneven ratio of female identifying children to male identifying children I wanted all of my children to feel as comfortable as possible when exploring the work to focus on giving something a go and not have to face any unnecessary hurdles such as whether or not they could be part of a group if the script writing didn't allow The more I wrote the more I fell in love with the idea of drama and theatre being a medium where children don't have to worry about being boys or girls and instead simply exploring text and enjoying the work in front of them
