Scott Wilson, MD,2020-10-27 Genital warts and related manifestation attributed to the dominant human low risk HPV. More than 100 different types of HPV virus have been identified, but only 35 have affinity to genital. Most have been linked directly to non-reproductive skin lesions and warts. Two genital types of low risk HPV exist, but only HPV lesions and high risk neoplastic HPV lesions. The low risk strains rarely form genital warts and recurrent respiratory papilloma well known. Two types 6 and 11 account for more than 90% of genital warts and most cases of RRP. These are least likely to have malignant potential. The human papillomavirus HPV types 33 35 39 40 43 45 51 56 58 have a moderate risk for genital conversion. HPV 16 and HPV 18 represent high risk more than 70% of vulvar and penile neoplasms from 2 types. This picture misled by the proven existence of more than the same patient 10-15% lack of information on the oncogenic potential of many other types and ongoing detection of additional HPV related local pathology. For example, beyond ulceration and bleeding. But, human papilloma virus previously referred to the differential diagnosis of genital warts have been linked to HPV infection. Viral Warts Mary H.
