Michael Scott, Patricia Heglund, Michael L. Morrison, 2002-02 Predictions about where different species are where they are not and how they move across a landscape or respond to human activities if timber is harvested for instance or stream flow altered are important aspects of the work of wildlife biologists land managers and the agencies and policymakers that govern natural resources Despite the increased use and importance of model predictions these predictions are seldom tested and have unknown levels of accuracy Predicting Species Occurrences addresses those concerns highlighting for managers and researchers the strengths and weaknesses of current approaches as well as the magnitude of the research required to improve or test predictions of currently used models The book is an outgrowth of an international symposium held in October 1999 that brought together scientists and researchers at the forefront of efforts to process information about species at different spatial and temporal scales It is a comprehensive reference that offers an exhaustive treatment of the subject with 65 chapters by leading experts from around the world that review the history of the theory and practice of modeling and present a standard terminology examine temporal and spatial scales in terms of their influence on patterns and processes of species distribution offer detailed discussions of state of the art modeling tools and descriptions of methods for assessing model accuracy discuss how to predict species presence and abundance present examples of how spatially explicit data on demographics can provide important information for managers An introductory chapter by Michael A Huston examines the ecological context in which predictions of species occurrences are made and a concluding chapter by John A Wiens offers an insightful review and synthesis of the topics examined along with guidance for future directions and cautions regarding misuse of models Other contributors include Michael P Austin Barry R Noon Alan H Fielding Michael Goodchild Brian A Maurer John T Rotenberry Paul Angermeier Pierre R Vernier and more than a hundred others Predicting Species Occurrences offers important new information about many of the topics raised in the seminal volume Wildlife 2000 University of Wisconsin Press 1986 and will be the standard reference on this subject for years to come Its state of the art assessment will play a key role in guiding the continued development and application of tools for making accurate predictions and is an indispensable volume for anyone engaged in species management or conservation      New Publications ,1985

Birds and Habitat Robert J. Fuller, 2012-11-08 The successful conservation of bird species relies upon our understanding of their habitat use and requirements In the coming decades the importance of such knowledge will only grow as climate change the development of new energy sources and the needs of a growing human population intensify the already significant pressure on the habitats that birds depend on Drawing on valuable recent advances in our understanding of bird habitat relationships this book provides the first major review of avian habitat selection in over twenty years It offers a synthesis of concepts patterns and issues that will interest students researchers and conservation practitioners Spatial scales ranging from landscape to habitat patch are covered and examples of responses to habitat change are examined European landscapes are the main focus but the book has far wider significance to similar habitats worldwide with examples and relevant material also drawn from North America and Australia     General Technical Report PSW. ,2005     Flathead National Forest (N.F.), Meadow Smith Project ,2000     Chugach National Forest (N.F.), Resurrection Creek Stream and Riparian Restoration Project ,2004     Continental Conservation Michael E.
