The Science Method (part 1)

How do scientists make discoveries? How do they know what they know?

A hypothesis is a statement that can be tested. It is a prediction about what will happen in an experiment.

Scientists make hypotheses based on what they know from previous experiments and observations.

They then test their hypotheses by doing experiments.

If the results of the experiment support the hypothesis, the hypothesis is accepted.

If the results do not support the hypothesis, the hypothesis is rejected.

Scientists then make a new hypothesis and test it again.

This process is called the scientific method.

It is a way of thinking that helps scientists make discoveries.

It is also a way of thinking that helps us make decisions in our everyday lives.

For example, if you want to know if a new medicine will work, you would test it using the scientific method.

You would make a hypothesis, test it, and see if the results support or reject your hypothesis.

This is how scientists make discoveries and how we can use the scientific method to make decisions in our lives.
