beyond current human centred thinking to an approach where humans and machines share by using the same processes that underlie the sharing between humans This sharing centred approach to automation is explained and illustrated Throughout the book the current state of human machine interactions is illustrated with vignettes from aviation medicine and from organisations The book also discusses three pictures of future human machine interactions of the flightdeck in primary care medical practice and in boardrooms of major organisations The main readership includes all who are interested in innovation and organisational development especially in the technology based industries and services such as healthcare transportation manufacturing and information systems it provides essential new ideas for senior executives strategic consultants specialists in organisational behaviour and human resources members of regulatory agencies and other government facilities and academicians and researchers
