Frommer, Heiner E. Goldbach, H.-W. Olf, V. Römheld, B. Sattelmacher, U. Schmidhalter, S. Schubert, N. von Wirén, L. Wittenmayer, 2006-05-18 The world's population is expected to reach 8 billion by 2025 and most of this growth in population will occur in developing countries To feed the world with such a marked increase in population a great improvement in food production must be achieved particularly in these countries To meet this challenge present agricultural productivity must be increased on the cultivated land However in many developing countries particularly in Africa reduced soil fertility caused by continuous cropping with low nutrient input and the resultant nutrient mining of soils is a major threat both to food production and to ecosystem viability As a result of declining soil fertility together with increasing population pressure expansion of crop production to marginal lands and forested areas contribute to the destruction of natural ecosystems Food production is not only a quantitative challenge Improving the nutrient status of plants provides a further valuable means of enhancing food quality and is of extreme benefit to the health of both plants and humans There are several excellent examples showing that plants with optimum nutrient status are better adapted to biotic and abiotic stress factors Because of population pressures many global food systems are not currently providing enough micronutrients to ensure adequate micronutrient intakes in the human diet This has resulted in an increasing prevalence of micronutrient deficiencies that now afflicts over three billion people worldwide      Revista del Archivo y Biblioteca Nacionales, 1927      American colonial handbook ... about Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, Hawaii and Guam, by T.
