Soziale Psychiatrie Germany Choosing Methods in Mental Health Research Mike Slade, Stefan Priebe, 2007-01-24
Choosing Methods in Mental Health Research develops a new framework for mental health research. It is concerned with how to choose the most appropriate mental health research method not only to address a specific question but to maximize the potential impact on shaping mental health care. Mike Slade and Stefan Priebe focus attention on the types of audience that the researcher is seeking to influence, the types of evidence each audience accepts as valid, and the relative strengths and limitations of each type of methodology. A range of research methodologies are described and critically appraised, and the use of evidence by different groups is discussed. This produces some important findings about the interplay between research production and consumption and highlights directions for future mental health research theory and practice. The findings presented here will be relevant to mental health service users and professionals who use research evidence to inform decision making. It will also prove an invaluable resource for students and researchers in the field of mental health.

Eide, Staffan Josephsson, Kjersti Vik, 2017-02-17. Today, healthy ageing and active, meaningful lives are core values and aims for international and national health policies. Health services are challenged to ensure that the recipients of their services are active participants in their own care and beyond. Participation allows patients to become less dependent on healthcare providers, increasing their control over their own treatment and health. Increasingly, the idea of participation is shifting from participation in services to participation in mainstream society. This book examines the concept of participation as well as the different meanings it takes on in the context of health and welfare services. It asks how services can enable and stimulate participation outside of those services. The contributions in this volume particularly focus on participation as engagement in daily life and everyday life in order to develop the field of participation beyond the sphere of health and social care services.
